

Balance Master simulates the real situation when we have to finish two tasks at the same time. Hopefully from this game, the players can develop their own strategies to help them live a better life. Now, suppose you are a college boy named Tom. You are trying to keep a long-distance relationship with your girlfriend Joanna. But at the same time, you really want to master those hard-core subjects you have in this semester. So your goal is to pass the finishing line of both tasks within 10 rounds (right panel). The situations (left panel) will lift you up or pull you down. You will need a dice for this game.

- 1) Cut out the progress flags and the triangle situation marks. Put them at corresponding arrows.
- 2) For each round, decide which one (or both) task(s) you will work on.
- 3) If you decide to do both, first roll the dice for Task A, generate a new situation by moving Mark A in the situation flow, and accept what is coming. Then repeat the operation for Task B. Because if you have multiple tasks at the same time, then you cannot control the situation because your energy is limited.
- 4) If you decide to focus on one task instead, do as 3). The difference is that you can only work on the chosen task, but you can roll the dice for a second time if you do not like your first roll. Because you are more likely to solve a problem if you put all energy on one task.
